About Prakratik Society NGO:

The Prakratik Society is an environmental and social Non-governmental Organization working around Ranthambhore National Park in Rajasthan, India, one of the world's best known tiger preserves. Founded in 1994 by Dr. Goverdhan Singh Rathore, the mission of the society is to find solutions to the conflict between people and animals at Ranthambhore, to ensure survival of both the tiger in the forest and the large and growing, desperately poor population that draws on the park for wood and live-stock fodder.

The Prakratik Society's programs include: education, both formal and informal, an English-language-medium school, grades K-12 and environmental education through nature camps, environmental awareness competitions, a mobile library, and film screenings in neighbouring schools and villages; healthcare, the Ranthambhore Savika Hospital as well as health-care outreach; family planning and family counselling; alternative energy sources (biogas), agro-forestry to green de-nuded land in the area, artificial insemination to improve local cattle breeding stock, a legal cell to help prosecute poachers of leopards and tigers and collaboration with other local NGOs such as the area's well-known Tiger Watch. Prakratik also has a big new hospital in the city of Sawai Madhopur That is Ranthambore Savika Hospital.

In 2001, Prakratik received the Esso Honor for Tiger Conservation, in recognition of Dr. Rathore's service to the community and to conservation, which was presented to him by Chief Election Commissioner M.S. Gill. The citation reads "He has worked in community conservation and primary health care with the local communities in and around the Ranthambhore National Park and achieved outstanding results in both population planning and alternative energy. This award salutes Mr. Goverdhan Singh for his service to the community and the nation for his tireless effort and crusade to keep Ranthambhore alive and healthy."
